Html tags table border color

The Table Bordercolor Attribute is Obsolete The following information is provided for it's historical value. This attribute is obsolete and should not be used. Browser support for this attribute is limited and using it may produce unexpected results. Instead of bordercolor, use CSS to style tables. In this section we'll look at setting the colors of table borders. First, we'll look at setting the borders to a single color. Next, we'll look at setting the light and dark shades of the border. The color of the table borders as a whole is set with the BORDERCOLOR attribute of the tag. For example, this code sets the border to red: carrots garlic celery onions Here's how it looks:carrotsgarlicceleryonionsNetscape and MSIE have very different ways of rendering BORDERCOLOR. Netscape maintains the 3-D appearance. MSIE renders all borders as the same color, making the border appear flat. MSIE also sets the color of the inner borders. Browserflow it LooksInternet ExplorerNetscapeTable Borders: Light and DarkIn the previous example we set a single color for all the borders of the table. In this page we'll look at setting the "light" and the "dark" borders separately. Note that currently only MSIE recognizes the markup necessary to set the light and dark borders separately. Visual web browsers such as Netscape and MSIE render table borders with a three-dimensional appearance. They do this by making the top and left borders lighter than the bottom right borders. This makes the table look like it is partly under a light source with and partly in shadow. If you visualize a light source above and to the left of the table it's easier to remember which borders are light and which are dark. We set the light and dark borders with BORDERCOLORLIGHT and BORDERCOLORDARK. So, for example, this code sets the light borders to yellow and the dark to blue: blah blah blah yeah yeah yeah whatever whatever right on! Here's how that code renders in the browser, but note that this is an obsolete attribute and it may not render properly in modern browsers.blah blah blahyeah yeah yeahwhatever whatever right on! Using All Three BORDERCOLOR Attributes at OnceNetscape and MSIE both recognize BORDERCOLOR, but currently only MSIE recognizes BORDERCOLORLIGHT and BORDERCOLORDARK. However, you can use all three at once because MSIE ignores BORDERCOLOR if it finds BORDERCOLORLIGHT and BORDERCOLORDARK. You can use this feature to get a little more control over the border colors than if you use just one or two of those attributes. For example, this code says that the overall border color is blue, but also specifies that the light portion is a light blue and the dark portion is regular blue: blah blah blah yeah yeah yeah whatever whatever right on! Here's how that code renders in the browser, but note that this is an obsolete attribute and it may not render properly in modern browsers.blah blah blahyeah yeah yeahwhatever whatever right on!
